SHOPS LOOTED BY THE RETIRING GREEK TROOPS-THE TURKS RESTRAINED FROM PILLAGE.

Larissa correspondence of The London Times.

Yesterday morning (April 25) two squadrons of cavalry. followed by the remainder of a prigade and supported by their horse batteries, entered and took possession of this town after a short engagement with so much of the Greek rearguard as was not occupied in pillage or flight. Grumbkoff Pacha, the German Inspector-General of Artillery (but holding no active command), who had arrived a few days ago, asked Edhem Pacha to allow him to go on from Turnavo with ten squadrons and one battalion horse artillery, and he took Larissa on horseoack practically without any resistance, strongly against Edhem's advice and without the Sultan's knowledge; so that Edhem Pacha was compelled to allow the place to be occupied, though apparently he had no intention of doing so.

The remainder of the Greek Army, after distinguishing liself by setting fire to the batracks and looting the shops of the civil population, in company with the revolutionary seum that rises to the top at such moments, judged discretion more serviceable than valor and fied pellmell. Even the doctors and the hospital assistants left their charges, some of whom died untended and alone before they were found out by the Turkish medical officials. The Crown Prince, indeed, tried to restrain the excesses of his dishanded soldiery and to prevent what might have once been an orderly retreat from lapsing into the miserable débàcle, whose effects are now before us. No doubt as a Prince and a gentleman he did his best. But it is evident that the army under his command was as lacking in organization as it was in real morale.

The position along the Sahembria, the ancient Peneus, was certainly not a good one from a tactical point of view, and the instant that Turnavo had finally fallen the fate of Larissa was sealed. But some organized attempt to defend the bridge heads would, at any rate, have gained time and enabled the main body of the army to retire to the heights at the southern end of the plain and to make some disposition Larissa correspondence of The London Times.

Athens.

As it is, not only have the troops disgraced themselves as soldiers and citizens by sacking their own town and deserting their sick and wounded, but in their flight to the mountains they have left behind the greater part of their ammunition, many of their guns and the best of their war material, and have divided an already dwinding force into two portions, either of which is incompetent to support an attack the greater part of their ammunition, many of their guns and the best of their war material, and have divided an already dwinding force into two portions, either of which is incompetent to support an attack from a single column of the Turkish Army. The latter has been moving up to-day, and now two divisions lie to the right, two to the left and three round the town, while the lines of communication are strongly guarded. Elassona becoming for the moment an advanced base.

A more miserable spectacle than Larissa presented when I rode in with the cavalry yesterday before a single foot soldier had arrived it would be hard to imagine, and douby atrocious as caused by its so-called defenders. Most of the shops were shut or broken into, while in every home the same evidences of pillage met the eye-furniture, clothes, food and wine scattered about in disorder, much perhaps the hurry of flight, but much also common brigandage. Yesterday evening and last night most of the Turkish officers have been occupied in preventing any repetition of the same class of thing, and they have in almost every case successful attempts at plundering among the Albanian regiments; but they have been isolated, and this morning two soldlers who had been warned before were shot in the market-place for disobelience to orders. The effect was instantaneous, and the commandant's exemplary action shows better than words the disolphine that exists. For it is no small thing to restrain a large body of ignorant, uncultivated men who have taken a town in lawful war from exercising what seems to them their right, especially when their enemies have half-drained the cup.

Security, however, will soon be restored, for though the shops are not yet opened, the Christian merchants are coming back and asking leave to resume their ordinary vocations, and it is probable that in a few days the town will have again assumed its ordinary appearance. Until the marshal arrives, it is not known whether a provisional civil governor will be appointed in Larissa or whether

SCHOONERS CRASH TOGETHER IN THE BAY

BOTH BADLY DAMAGED BY A COLLISION ON A CLEAR MOONLIGHT NIGHT.

Two sailing vessels were badly damaged by at about 2 a. m. yesterday. They were the twomasted Nova Scotian schooner Sierra, which was inward bound with a cargo of cocoanuts, from Mayaguez, and the three-masted American schooner Julia S. Bailey, bound hence for Philadelphia, in ballast. The moon was shining brightly and there was a fine northwest wind. The Sierra was sailing up the channel, close hauled on the starboard tack at a speed of about six knots an hour, while the was before the wind and making about nine knots an hour. The vessels came together with a terrific crash. The most extensive damage was sustained by the Sierra, which is of only 140 tons, while the Bailey is of 306 tons. The Sierra's foremast was carried away and tumbled end on at an angle of about 45 degrees. The foremast dragged down the maintopmast, with all the sails and rigging in confusion. The top side of the port bow was cut through and the bulwarks were The Bailey's jibboom and head gear were smashed. The Balley's jibboom and head gear were carried away.

The vessels, which were badly fouled and entangled in the rigging, immediately anchored, and it was surrise before their crews succeeded in clearing away the wreckage. In the morning the tugboat James Roy towed the Sierra to Quarantine. The Balley also returned for repairs. The crews of both vessels had many narrow escapes, but were fortunately uninjured.

REAL ESTATE.

GOOD PRICES AT THE AUCTION SALE OF THE DAVID JONES ESTATE.

THE MARKET HOLDING ITS OWN, WITH VALUES WELL MAINTAINED AND FEW SALES-THIS

A decidedly better feeling was noted in the real estate market last week. While many private sales of improved realty were recorded and an unusually large number of building sites changed hands, and be improved by the erection of flathouses. dwellings and business properties so soon as plans week's transactions was the auction sale on Wednesday, at which Peter F. Meyer sold at prices entirely satisfactory to the heirs of David Jones many small parcels, principally on the East Side. A total of more than half a million was realized by this sale. There has been a disposition of late for propertyowners to look askance upon auction sales, and the feeling has become far too prevalent that any property-holder who has the temerity to offer any par cels of realty, improved or vacant, under the hammer, must expect to have its actual value discounted about 20 per cent. Wednesday's sale had been advertised for weeks, and announcement had been made that competition would be absolutely free and open, and that no effort would be made by the executors to protect the offerings in any way. Consequently, the auction-room held one of the largest crowds of prospective buyers ever assembled in th Broadway salesroom, and at its close brokers, operators, auctioneers and, in fact, every well-informed real estate man, was ready to declare that the uniformly good prices secured for every one of the several classes of offerings fully demonstrated the fact that, if all auction sales were conducted under similar conditions, there would be far less cause for the general complaint and disfavor with which auctions have unfortunately come to be regarded was the willingness and even eagerness of the small values for properties offering a reasonable return. Doubtless better prices were secured at this auction than could have been obtained for the separate par-

Notwithstanding these encouraging features of the market, the usual number of croakers were making themselves heard in many of the brokers' offices. It may not be out of place to call the attention of this class of men, who persist in finding fault with the market, no matter what the conditions may be, to the fact that the records show that the market is more than holding its own, and that one of the foremost reasons why more actual sales are not made from day to day, is that property in favorable locations is not for sale to-day at prices owners That owners are determined to hold their properties pressure, is amply shown by the fact that pracfigures considerably in advance of the prices recently paid by the sellers. Another evidence of this tendency to hold property is shown by the vast improvements now being made by owners who have secured building loans with little difficulty. Last year the building operations were so large that a considerable falling off in this direction was looked for this season. That this view was erroneous is proven by the comparative tables showing that the total amount invested in projected new buildings from January 1 to May 15 last, is $39,492,455, while for the same period in last year the total amount
